What is Home Without an Heir!

This is a subject that has a place in all minds in all times. And it naturally directs thought as to the comfort of the mother during that wonderful period of expectancy. Mothers who know recommend "Mother's Friend." It is an external remedy for the stretching, aching, aches, and pains which women everywhere relate they entirely escaped by using "Mother's Friend." And by its effect upon the muscles the form is retained and they return to their natural, smooth contour after baby is born.

This is an interesting and valuable thing to remember. The skin is but a net work of very small blood vessels and connective tissue and by keeping it well lubricated, firm and in strong, vigorous condition it will not get soft. And when the time has passed it will return to its natural shape without the seams and scars that are so liable to be the case if "Mother's Friend" is not used. Get a bottle of this invaluable aid to expectant mothers. Any drugist will supply you. It is harmless but wonderfully effective. Write to Bradfield Regulator Co., 715 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for a specially written guide book for women interested in the subject of maternity. It will prove an inspiration. It contains information that every woman should know all about. Write today.

Striped Voile in Green and White.

First place on the list of summer materials is given to striped voile, and the color combinations are varied and pleasing enough to suit every youthful fancy. For this simple frock voile in a white stripe was chosen, the Bayadere effect of the blouse being in effective contrast to the vertical arrangement of the stripes in the skirt, the latter gaining a note of distinction by the graceful drapery at either side. Frills of organza at neck and sleeves make a pretty finish.

THE DAILY ADVENTURES OF PUSS IN BOOTS, JR. They Find the Old Woman Sweeping Cobwebs Off the Sky.

By DAVID CORY.

"Come," said Mother Goose, after breakfast was over and she had thanked the farmer's wife for her hospitality, "come, dear Puss Junior, we must be on our way; for it's a long journey to Mother Goose Land."

"Goodbye," said Puss to the farmer's wife; then he turned to the little cat, who had brought them to the farm-house, "thank you, my dear Miss Pussy, also; for had it not been for your kindly guidance, I feel sure I should nearly have starved."

The Gander, in the meantime, was busily preening his feathers as if aware that he must put everything in good shape before the journey. He flapped his wings as if to try them before venturing in the air. Then he gave his tail a twist or two to assure himself that his steering gear was working perfectly. After which he stood

"Seated quite comfortably in a large bushel basket," waiting for Mother Goose to take her seat upon his back. This she speedily did, and Puss jumped quickly after.

"Honk! Honk!" cried the Gander, rising slowly from the ground, for it was no light weight he had to carry. The farmer's wife, waving her apron and the little cat her tail, and her paw, too, I think, although Puss could hardly tell, for he was so high up that it was difficult to see anything now distinctly. Away they went, fast as the good old Gander could make his wings go, through the balmy summer morning air.

Suddenly across the sky they saw a strange sight. Puss was about to speak, when Mother Goose softly began to croon:

"There was an old woman tossed in a basket,
Seventeen times as high as the moon;
But where she was going no mortal could tell."

For under her arm she carried a broom.

"Old woman, old woman, old woman," said I, "whither, oh whither, oh whither so high?"

To sweep the cobwebs from the sky; And I'll be with you by-and-by."

As she finished the Gander came close up to the Old Woman. She was seated quite comfortably in a large bushel basket. Over her shoulder she carried a broom, and on her head she wore a peaked hat, very much like Mother Goose's.

"Well, well," she exclaimed, "I'm delighted to see you, my dear Mother Goose. I hope you'll excuse the dust which I may have raised, but those cobwebs have been annoying me for some time, and I made up my mind this morning early that I would sweep them off if it took me all day and all night, and even part of next day."

"Quite a job," said Puss, looking with admiration at the Old Woman. "You have a wonderful basket. It's as good as a balloon."

"Much better, I assure you," replied the Old Woman. "Balloons require constant filling with air or gas, but my basket, empty or full, sails on forever."

"Oh, much rather have a Gander," whispered Puss to Mother Goose, which pleased the Gander immensely, although he said nothing.

HOROSCOPE Friday, July 7, 1916.

Astrologers read this as rather an unfavorable day, since Mars and Venus are both in evil place. Neptune changes from adverse to friendly aspect. It is an unfortunate rule for love affairs, which will be more numerous than usual. Again the middle-aged and old are warned that the stars may cause a foolish susceptibility.

Children born on this date today are not well directed by the stars today. The signs are forbidding for transactions connected with iron, steel and machinery. Accidents are probable as well as money losses.

Buying should be delayed, so should surgical operations and whatever energy is expended should be used in routine work.

An escape from danger on the sea is foreboded. It is an unlucky rule for ocean voyages.

Neptune is read as indicating a new consciousness of spiritual conditions and as foreshadowing the coming of great teachers, known as adepts or masters. The stars presage the death of more than one well-known priest and clergyman.

For those who look forward with questionings to the winter, the astrologers predict that, notwithstanding peace agitation, hostilities will continue into cold weather with even worse conditions than at any previous time, but the death of a ruler will hasten the end of the war.

Congress has the likelihood of a sensation that will change the representation from certain southern states.

Persons whose birthdate it is may have domestic and business activities. They should not travel or remove.

Children born on this day may be too much interested in artistic pursuits to succeed in business or practical affairs. These subjects of Cancer, who are swayed by the Moon, should be taught tidiness and system.

MAKES FRESH ATTACK ON BEEF INDUSTRY

Borland Says Packers Regulate Meat Prices and Controls Banks Making Loans to Cattle Dealers.

A subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee concluded hearings yesterday on the Borland resolution, directing the Federal Trade Commission to investigate an alleged "beef trust." Representative Borland, of Missouri, filed a supplementary statement charging that the "trust" manipulated prices and controlled banks that lend money to cattle producers.

Mr. Borland also presented a petition from more than 100 members of Congress, suggesting that the Federal Trade Commission ought to look into the question of high meat prices.

Arthur Meeker, vice president of Armour and Company, told the committee that the packing business is one of "a large volume of business and small profits."

"As I understand it," he said, "Mr. Borland introduced this resolution for an investigation, on the complaint of some livestock producers and feeders that they lost about $15 per head during 1915. Permit me to say that Armour and Company, did not get the money which the producer lost. Our profit on cattle slaughtered during 1915 was $1.19 a head."

The Department of Agriculture issued a bulletin yesterday on cattle production in eleven Western range States. The bulletin holds out little promise of lower meat prices.

IN DEADLOCK OVER SHIP PURCHASE BILL

Senate Republicans Postpone Caucus Until Democrats Take Definite Action.

A legislative deadlock is on in the Senate. The action of the Democratic Senators Wednesday night in adjourning their caucus without reaching any agreement on the suggestion made to them by the Republican side that they postpone action on the ship-purchase bill, resulted in the Republicans postponing their caucus called for yesterday morning.

The Senate Committee on Commerce wrestled with the ship bill, but was unable to report it out. The difficulty seems to be that the committee members have been unable to agree on the necessary amendments to meet the objections of certain Democratic Senators, who say they will not vote for the bill unless it is modified in many respects. In this list of dissenters is Senator Clarke, of Arkansas, president pro tem.

The committee worked on the bill yesterday, and will consider it further today. The Republicans are playing a waiting game. They will take no caucus action until the Democrats have met and made some reply to the Republican demand that the ship bill be put over.

GIANT GERMAN U-BOAT SIGHTED ON WAY HERE

Steamer Westerdyk Reports Seeing Submersible Tow-thirds Across the Atlantic.

Baltimore, July 6.—A dispatch today from Sydney, N. S., says that an "officer of the steamer Corpin, in port here, says that on Saturday last the ship spoke to the Dutch steamer Westerdyk, which reported sighting a giant German submarine in 20 degrees west longitude, about two-thirds of the distance across the Atlantic.

"The U-boat was apparently bound to the United States, and according to the Westerdyk, should by this time either have arrived or be nearing port. The submarine was sailing on the surface at a 15-knot clip. Before reaching the Westerdyk, the U-boat submerged and her periscope slid along through the water at a 45-degree angle.

The steamer Westerdyk sailed from Baltimore June 23 for Amsterdam.

PRESIDENT STARTS BIG DEMONSTRATION

President Wilson touched the chords of patriotism at Keith's Theater last night, when he addressed the audience with a demonstration of feeling as unusual as it was vociferous.

The President sat in a box. With him were Mrs. Wilson, her mother, Mrs. Bolling, Miss Bertha Bolling, and John R. Bolling. Their interest centering in Mercedes, the telepathist, who, with Mile. Stanton, gives a manifestation of the power of thought when connecting minds in sympathetic relationship.

When Mercedes entered the White House box, in the usual course of his rounds of the audience, the President asked him, in a whisper, to cause Mile. Stanton to play "The Star Spangled Banner." Then following Mercedes' instructions, the President called out to Mile. Stanton, "Play my selection, please."

Like a flash, the blindfolded pianist followed with the chords of the national anthem. The President rose, the audience sprang to their feet, and the national anthem was ended, the demonstration broke forth.

PERSONALITIES I HAVE MET.
Pauline Frederick

IN ALL of our lives there are times when we find ourselves in the same position as stage-door Johnnies, waiting around the entrance of the theater in hopes we will catch a glimpse of the leading woman and the leading man as they emerge from the black alleyway which is the path from the rear stage entrance.

This is exactly what I did after seeing Pauline Frederick as Pottphar's wife in "Joseph and His Brethren."

"She is so beautiful on the stage," I remarked to my mother. "Let us wait here until she comes out of the theater. I would like to see her in the sunlight."

I was playing in "The Good Little Devil" at that time, but, fortunately, our matinees were on different afternoons, so I had this happy opportunity of seeing this beautiful production.

Long and patiently we waited for her to appear, but we were rewarded when we finally caught a glimpse of her. There was no disillusionment about Miss Frederick—she was even more magnetic off the stage than she was across the footlights.

Her mother was with her, though at that time we thought it must surely be her sister, for though her hair was silver gray, her face was so young and she was such a stunning looking woman we could not credit her with a grown-up daughter.

Again, we went to see Miss Frederick in "Innocence" and from then we became real Pauline Frederick fans. Today Miss Frederick is considered one of the very best dressed women on the stage, and her gowns have been a revelation in pictures.

Following her advent into the Famous Players studio, I told her after our meeting of my great admiration, which extended even to my lingering outside the theater to see her mother and herself step into their limousine.

Perhaps the most successful picture she has done, and which gave her the best opportunity for the display of her talent and her beauty, was Robert Hichens' "Belladonna," the part which Nazimova created. Twice we went to see this picture run and after both performances we listened to the amusing remarks of the people as they strolled out of the theater.

"I can't understand myself," confided one woman to her husband, "but, do you know—I couldn't dislike Miss Frederick even though she were such a wicked villainess, poisoning her husband's coffee."

The woman's husband hinted in a veiled manner that very few men would object even to the meeting of death through such a beautiful medium, and I quite agreed with him, for Miss Frederick gave such a remarkable characterization that it was with difficulty one censured her for her crimes.

Then there was "Sold" and "Zaza," both interesting pictures, especially "Zaza," around which there revolved quite a bit of dramatic history, for after weeks of fatiguing
